The Recovery Writer's Group is a safe place to tell your story one page at a time. It's a chance to organize and communicate your emotions, thoughts and desires among an audience thirsty to become enlightened by your experiences. This is a relaxed environment with an anything goes sort of feel.

The one requirement is one double spaced type page a week, or the handwritten equivalent. This can be a section of the whole story, a poem, a rant, a love letter, a page from your journal, etc. After each page is read the group will briefly discuss and if wanted constructive editing can be suggested.

Most likely everyone involved will have their own reason to be a part of this group but the overall desire is to be heard and to hear each other. When we put pen to paper our true feelings are more evident and organized. We are embracing and recording all our fears, joy, sadness, laughter, tears, etc. so we can all reflect and others can be moved and inspired.
